

Written a Book?

Claim Your FREE Writer's Guide to Publishing and learn how to publish your book now.

NHS charges putting pregnant migrant women in danger

Women are running away from antenatal units to avoid costs, putting their babies' – and their own – lives at risk, charity warns

Diane Taylor

The Guardian, Friday 27 December 2013 15.11 EST

One pregnant woman says her husband is still paying off the bill for the birth of her last child, and she cannot afford to pay thousands more. Photograph: Martin Godwin

Pregnant immigrants are endangering their lives by disappearing from antenatal care to give birth at home because they cannot afford their NHS maternity charges, leading midwives have warned.

Some women are running away from antenatal units or giving false addresses and then turning up in labour with severe complications, putting their and their babies' lives at risk, the charity Maternity Action has found.

Thousands of women are thought to be affected by the NHS charges for care during pregnancy and childbirth that were introduced in August 2011 – the cost of which can run into several thousand pounds – although NHS guidance states this care is also deemed to be urgent treatment and should not be based on a patient's ability to pay.

Maternity Action conducted research based on interviews with 15 midwives and overseas visitors officers, who pursue payment from those who are not eligible for NHS care. All worked at London hospitals.

The charity found that hospitals interpret the charging rules differently. At some, overseas visitors officers come into antenatal units and are "vociferous" about chasing up payments; others adopt a less aggressive stance and give women a "shopping list of charges" so that they can buy some pregnancy or childbirth care from the NHS, but not the whole package if they cannot afford it.

The researchers heard the case of a woman who needed a caesarean for medical reasons, but who gave birth at home because she could not afford the charges. The midwives and overseas visitors officers told the charity that some women were not going to their antenatal appointments

Share 162

Tweet 170

0

Pin it

Share 2

Email

Article history

Society

NHS · Midwifery · Health

UK news

Immigration and asylum

Life and style

Pregnancy · Childbirth

More news

More on the NHS

NHS apologises for 'inexcusable failings' at centre for rape victims
Samples were not sent to forensic laboratories and patients were not told of results at Haven in Whitechapel, east London

Longer waits to see GP revealed in new survey

NHS chief admits to dismay at Jeremy Hunt's meddling

Hospitals prepare for winter rush

A&E targets missed by hospitals for second week running

On Society

Most viewed Latest

Last 24 hours

1. One in 10 young British 'have nothing to live for'

2. Liam Fox: 'Wasteful' NHS should not have funding ringfenced

3. Marijuana shoppers flock to Colorado for first legal recreational sales

4. 300,000 poor people live more than 1km from free cash machine

5. How Centrepont helped a young homeless woman who fled family breakdown – video

More most viewed

Today's best video

Did Roger Federer intend to do this incredible 'trick' smash shot?

Former world No1 leaves opponents and partner bemused during doubles match in Australia

David Moyes attacks Hugo Lloris's 'scandalous' tackle on Ashley Young Manager furious after 2-1 home defeat

Giant yellow duck

and were instead turning up in labour with severe complications.

The charity also heard that, in some cases, women had run away from antenatal care or given false addresses to midwives because they could not afford payment.

Janet Fyle, professional policy adviser to the Royal College of Midwives, warned that at some hospitals antenatal care was "going back to the dark days" and that midwives were being "used as immigration police".

Doctors of the World, which runs a clinic for migrants in east London, has seen more than 200 pregnant women who have not had antenatal care, either because they have been denied it or because they are scared of being charged. Eight of them were 36 weeks pregnant or more when they came to the clinic.

Phil Murwill, who runs the clinic, said: "By law, antenatal care should always be provided but we regularly see women who have been denied it, putting both mother and child at risk."

Ros Bragg, of Maternity Action, said: "We are in contact with a lot of midwives who tell us women are disappearing from antenatal care because they cannot pay for it. This is unacceptable. We are very concerned about the charging arrangements currently in place."

Susan Bewley, professor of complex obstetrics at King's College London, said the policy of charging migrant women for NHS antenatal care put pregnant women in danger.

"They may be put off accessing antenatal care that's good for them and their baby. If health professionals misinterpret their duties towards this group of women they might not come for scans, other checks or to deliver their babies," she said.

"We know that when women fail to access early antenatal care or any care at all, it can lead to poor outcomes for the mother and the baby.

"We live in a civilised society. It is dangerous not to look after pregnant women properly and not doing so reflects very badly on us all."

She said fear was "not good in pregnancy and especially not fear of the people who are supposed to be helping mothers and babies".

"It would be entirely unethical for doctors and midwives who serve the general public and the general good to say that there are 'deserving' pregnant women and 'undeserving' ones – that is corrupting for our professionalism," she said.

A Home Office spokesman said no woman should be denied access to maternity care as a result of their immigration status.

France, Spain, Italy, Belgium, the Netherlands and Portugal have some charges for healthcare for migrants but, unlike the UK, do not charge pregnant women for antenatal care or childbirth.

'We should be looking forward to the birth but I'm worried'

One pregnant woman who has fallen foul of the charging system is due to give birth at the beginning of January. She said she was terrified of going into labour because she was worried about being charged thousands of pounds she doesn't have for giving birth in an NHS hospital. She fears she may have to give birth without medical supervision to avoid this bill.

The woman, who cannot be named for legal reasons, has been living in the UK for eight years and has a British husband and child. She was charged more than £5,000 when she gave birth to her first child more than a year ago at Lewisham hospital in south London. Two other NHS hospitals have also asked for information to determine whether she should be charged for antenatal care.

"I have been stressed throughout this pregnancy and am very worried about how things are going to turn out," she said.

"My husband is still paying off the bill charged to us by Lewisham hospital for care during the pregnancy and birth. The baby I am carrying will be a British citizen when he or she is born but is missing out on NHS antenatal care because I have been denied it. We should be looking forward to the birth of our baby but instead we spend all our time talking about the way different hospitals are treating us. I am very worried about the health of explodes in Taiwan

Dutch artist's creation explodes in a Taiwan port

OpenDesk: a revolution in furniture design
Oliver Wainwright meets designer Nick Ierodiaconou

On the Guardian today

Sport

Michael Schumacher's manager to be interviewed about skiing accident

Comment is free

Duck Dynasty's Phil Robertson shows what's wrong with conservatives

Football

Premier League: 10 talking points from the New Year's Day action

Sport

Roger Federer smash shot leaves opponents baffled at Brisbane Invitational – video the baby because I have not received proper antenatal care."

A spokesman from Lewisham and Greenwich NHS trust said: "We would never deny antenatal care to someone who is pregnant. However, government legislation states that the trust has an obligation to check if patients are entitled to free NHS care and to arrange for payment after treatment if necessary."

Society briefing Sign up for the Society briefing email
Stay on top of the latest policy announcements, legislation and keep ahead of current thinking.
Sign up for the Society briefing email

Share Tweet Share Email

More from the Guardian

What's this?

Graduating with loads of debt and no job: is this really a 'lost generation'? 27 Dec 2013

Net migration cap damages Britain 27 Dec 2013

Diagnoses too slow for rare pain condition 27 Dec 2013

Rising household debt is cause for alarm, warns thinktank IPPR 28 Dec 2013

Children's commissioner calls for total smacking ban 28 Dec 2013

More from around the web

What's this?

Got a Lemon? Meet the 10 Worst Cars in America (Wall St. Cheat Sheet)

Best 5 Schools to get a Degree Online (Education Portal)

The Parents are Out of Control at this 5-Year-Old's Over-The-Top Birthday Bash (uLive)

Stop Paying So Much For Your Hotel Room. 4 Simple Steps to Cheaper Rates (ALuxury Travel Blog)

UCF Head Coach Says His QB's Girlfriend "Deserves 6 Million Googles" (Sports Illustrated)

250m Americans Infected

Learn More >>

Ads by Google

Pay Medical Bills Online

Make NCO Payments Online - Setup Email Reminder or Call Today!
consumerhelpunit.org/800-566-9596

$19 * Cheap Car Insurance

(New York Residents Only) Get a Free Quote & Save 55-75%!
quotelab.com/New-York

SelectQuote Auto & Home

We Shop For You. Average Savings of $457/year! Get Your Free Quote Now.
selectquote.com

Related information

UK news

Immigration and asylum

Life and style

Childbirth · Pregnancy

Tourists and migrants to be charged to use NHS emergency services
29 Dec 2013

Government aims to cut what it calls 'health tourism', but BMA warns plan may cost more to

23 Dec 2013

Eating nuts during pregnancy is safe, new research suggests

18 Dec 2013

Sex after cancer: 'Patients should not feel that bringing up sex is too trivial'

12 Dec 2013

NHS maternity care can be 'truly shocking', says

NHS maternity services survey reveals quarter of women left alone during labour - video
12 Dec 2013

Rona McCandlish from the care quality commission (CQC)

Society
Marijuana shoppers flock to Colorado for first legal recreational sales

Comment is free
We need to talk about TED

run that it will raise in charges

regulator

discusses NHS maternity services following its survey of women's experiences

License/buy our content | Privacy policy | Terms of service | US advertising | A - Z index | About us
© 2014 Guardian News and Media Limited or its affiliated companies. All rights reserved.